On Wednesday, the United States held a UFO hearing where David Grusch, a former intelligence officer who previously served with the Air Force and National Geospatial-Intelligence Agency, revealed some startling details about the existence of UFOs and extraterrestrials. The subject matter has been a long-debated topic in the United States of America since the infamous "UFOs of the White House" incident of 1952 all the way through the Presidential terms of Dwight Eisenhower, John F Kennedy, and Richard Nixon. After decades of passivity regarding UFO sightings, the U.S. government finally began investigating and documenting the mysterious phenomenon.

In recent years, government officials revealed that they were looking into over 600 cases of UFO-related activity. Today, the testimony that David Grusch gave under oath on Capitol Hill may have jumpstarted the process in a groundbreaking fashion. During his assertion, the 36-year-old UFO whistleblower revealed that he was privy to information about a UAP crash retrieval that resulted in a reverse engineering program and the recovery of UFOs that contained "nonhuman" occupants. Grush also stated that "biologics" were procured from the incidents--alleging he can support his claims with concrete evidence. In response, Democrats, Republicans, and Congress discussed the most effective way of navigating such sensitive intel.

"We're going to uncover the cover-up, and I hope this is just the beginning of many more hearings and many more people coming forward about this," said Congressman Tim Burchett (a Republican from Tennessee).

Congressman Robert Garcia (a Democrat from California) echoed the sentiment during the bipartisan court hearing. "People want to see data and information for themselves."

Despite the revelation, there were a number of skeptics among the politicians in attendance as the hot-bottom topic will remain an ongoing discussion between both political parties.
